LUNCH SPEAKERS

Clinical Assessment of Malingering: A Continuing Journey for Advancing Forensic Practice

Richard Rogers, PhD, ABPP, is a Regents Professor of Psychology at the University of North Texas. His past academic appointments included both the disciplines of psychiatry and psychology at Rush University and the University of Toronto. In addition, Dr. Rogers continues to consult on prominent cases and is often called specifically as a malingering expert. His research on malingering and related response styles spans more than three decades and 60 refereed articles. In 1988, he edited Clinical Assessment of Malingering and Deception (CAMD), which was nationally recognized as a milestone. A fully revised 4th edition of CAMD was released in the spring of 2018. Dr. Rogers is the principal author of the Structured Interview of Reported Symptoms (SIRS) and its second edition (SIRS-2). The SIRS/SIRS-2 is often considered the premier measure for feigned mental disorders. In 2011, Dr. Rogers became only the third psychologist in the history of APA to receive APA awards for Distinguished Professional Contributions to both Applied Research and Public Policy.

The Opioid Epidemic: How We Got Here, Where We Are Now, and How To Get Out

Dr. Lembke was one of the first in the medical community to sound the alarm regarding opioid overprescribing and the opioid epidemic. In 2016, she published her best-selling book on the prescription drug epidemic, Drug Dealer, MD – How Doctors Were Duped, Patients Got Hooked and Why It’s So Hard to Stop, that combines case studies with public policy, cultural anthropology, and neuroscience to explore the complex relationship between doctors and patients around prescribing controlled drugs, the science of addiction, and the barriers to successfully addressing prescription drug misuse and addiction.

The success of Drug Dealer, MD has had an impact on public policy makers and legislators across the nation in the wake of the ongoing opioid epidemic. Dr. Lembke testified before Congress, consulted with governors and senators from Kentucky to Missouri to Nevada, was a featured guest on Fresh Air with Terry Gross and appeared on MSNBC with Chris Hayes, the Today Show with Dr. Oz, the Megyn Kelly Show on CBS, and numerous other media broadcasts.

Using her teaching/academic position and her public platform, Dr. Lembke continues to advocate for people with addiction and educate health care professionals, policymakers, and the public on a wide variety of addiction-related topics.

Confronting an Active Shooter: Perspectives on the UT Tower Shooting 50 Years Later

Ranger Ramiro “Ray” Martinez spent over thirty years in law enforcement, serving with the Austin Police Department, Texas Department of Public Safety as a Narcotics Agent and as a Texas Ranger. He was involved in the University of Texas Tower sniper incident on August 1, 1966. Ranger Martinez received the Austin Police Medal of Valor for his role in bringing the tragedy to an end. Later, as a Texas Ranger, he participated in rooting out corruption and white collar crimes in South Texas, which reached from the county court house to the White House. He is a graduate of the FBI National Academy. Upon his retirement, Ranger Martinez served as a Justice of the Peace in Comal County, Texas. He authored two books, They Call Me Ranger Ray and Creating the Professional Texas Lawman. He serves on the Board of Directors for the Former Texas Ranger Association and the Former Texas Ranger Foundation. He has been featured on CBS News Sunday Morning, the BBC, Texas Monthly magazine, and the award-winning documentary, “Tower,” which was featured on PBS. He has made presentations before active assailant conferences, first responders training conferences and community colleges. He was recognized by the Texas Senate, in Senate Proclamation No.635, for his actions on August 1, 1966.

COURSES

Note that space is limited for courses.

#MeToo In Court: Practical Knowledge and Skills in Sexual Harassment Litigation

The #MeToo movement has demonstrated the widespread prevalence of sexual harassment, particularly in the workplace. Since 2010, sex-based harassment and sexual harassment have accounted for 25–30% of all EEOC discrimination charges. Psychological harm or “emotional distress” claims almost always accompany charges of sexual harassment, and attorneys generally use expert mental health professional witness testimony to prove or counter claims of causation and emotional distress damages. In addition, attorneys may request psychiatric evaluations of credibility, malingering, “welcomeness,” and “hypersensitivity.” Overstepping the bounds of expertise is all too easy when legal and psychiatric concepts do not neatly map together.

This course will review the legal framework of sexual harassment claims in employment litigation, the psychiatric issues that arise in such claims, and discuss competent evaluations of plaintiffs in sexual harassment litigation. Issues covered will include damages, causation of emotional harm, the role of diagnoses, the “glass jaw” or “hypersensitive” plaintiff, credibility vs. malingering, and addressing bias in sexual harassment evaluations. The course will conclude with mock depositions of a plaintiff’s expert and a defense expert. The course faculty have decades of experience in sexual harassment litigation, and ample time will be provided for questions, particularly around the mock depositions.
Fundamentals of Threat Assessment

Threat assessment is a professional activity related to, but distinct from, violence risk assessment. A core distinction is that violence risk assessment focuses on the likelihood that an individual poses a risk of harm to self or others, whereas threat assessment seeks to determine whether a person poses a threat of harm to another specific individual, organization, or other entity. Threat assessment is intrinsically multidisciplinary and is built on expertise from several non-clinical fields including law, law enforcement and investigation, operational security, and intelligence, with the primary focus of identifying and disrupting targeted violence. Threat assessment is typically not taught in psychiatry residency or forensic fellowship programs. Nevertheless, because of trends in workplace violence, school/campus violence, and active assailant incidents, forensic psychiatrists are increasingly likely to be asked to lend their expertise in addressing these serious societal problems. Participants will leave this course with an understanding of how to perform a threat assessment as part of a multidisciplinary team, how psychiatry contributes to the work of threat management, and what we as psychiatrists can learn from threat assessment to improve our own clinical and forensic practice. Attention will be paid to major sources of evidence, literature, and ethical standards.

Insanity Defense Evaluations: Overcoming Jury Skepticism

Phillip J. Resnick, MD, Cleveland, OH

The distinctions between the defenses of not guilty by reason of insanity, guilty but mentally ill, and diminished capacity will be explained. Tests for criminal responsibility will be placed in their historical perspective, including the wild beast test, M’Naghten standard, irresistible impulse, Durham rule, Model Penal Code, and the 1984 Federal rule. Participants will receive practical suggestions on conducting sanity interviews. Clues to knowledge of wrongfulness (legal and moral) and ability to refrain will be delineated. The limitations of the “policeman at the elbow” test will be examined. The faculty will discuss which diseases may qualify for an insanity defense. Intoxication and battered woman syndrome will also be covered. Common errors in writing insanity reports will be identified. Emphasis will be given on how to educate jurors about insanity to overcome common myths and jury skepticism.

Participants will practice writing insanity opinions after watching a videotaped case interview. Handouts will include 55 suggestions for cross-examiners of psychiatrists, 12 clues to malingered psychoses, principles of writing insanity reports, and two sample reports.

Contemporary Forensic Evaluation of Posttraumatic Stress Disorder

Andrew P. Levin, MD, Hartsdale, NY
Jeff Guina, MD, Saline, MI
Marc A. Cohen, MD, Beverly Hills, CA
Daniel A. Martell, PhD, Newport Beach, CA

This course will prepare attendees to perform a comprehensive evaluation of adults exposed to trauma to determine issues of causation, psychological injury, criminal responsibility, and disability. After an initial presentation focused on diagnostic considerations, course, biological underpinnings, and current standards of care in the treatment of PTSD, subsequent segments will address the role of psychological testing as well as specific considerations for evaluation in military, civil, and criminal settings. In addition to didactic presentations, attendees will be invited to review and discuss cases with a focus on malingering, prognosis, and disability.
