

American Academy of Psychiatry and the Law Forensic Psychiatry Self-Assessment Examination

The goal of the American Academy of Psychiatry and the Law's Forensic Psychiatry Self-Assessment Examination is to provide information and feedback on individual competence and performance in current best practices in forensic psychiatry, as well as comparison to peers.

The AAPL MOC Self-Assessment Exam is offered four times per year: January, April, June and October. Participants will have 30 days from the exam release date to complete the online test. The test can be done in one sitting or at will. A link to the test with a username and password will be emailed to participants prior to release of the exam. There is no study guide to accompany this test.

Those who receive a passing score of 51% will receive a CME certificate for 24 AMA PRA Category 1 Credit(s)TM. Certificates will be mailed after the exam deadline.

Important Reminder: You may take the Self-Assessment Exam more than once but you are only allowed to claim the CME credit (24.0 hours) once every three years.
